

Precis Of Thoughts On Thought

A Critical Précis Sample

In chapter one of his novel The Light in the Forest (1953), Conrad Richter insinuates that children suffer the most when adults fight. Richter develops this insinuation by contrasting Cuyloga's adoption and later rejection of True Son when the white army demands the return of all white prisoners.

Richter's purpose in chapter one is to reveal True Son's conflicting emotions in order to expose the effect that betrayal by adults has upon children. Richter employs an angry and betrayed tone to appeal to those readers who can sympathize with True Son's feelings of painful rejection.
